

I write to ask you to cautiously consider state laws before crafting any FCC regulation that would trump them. Specifically, Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law has beautifully served its purpose in reducing unwanted solicitations at my home, saving me from answering about 8 unwanted commercial solicitations per week. I realize that telephone privacy is a complex issue, and that unrestricted free enterprise is crucial to our economy, but I nonetheless vigorously support the Indiana Attorney General's office in its efforts to stop invasive marketing techniques. Don't pre-empt our local laws.
